buffett_vig_1 Imagine that, on April 25, 2022, Warren Buffett struck a deal with Twitter to buy the company for $44 billion. Buffett states that his goal in acquiring Twitter is to allow for more censorship on the platform, reducing free speech that is clearly harmful to others or to democracy.

Currently, Buffett's acquisition of Twitter is "on hold". Still, imagine what you would do if the deal

Debriefing

For many companies, their values are central to what they offer to consumers. Coca-Cola is about community-driven fun, Patagonia is about connecting with nature, and Nike is about bringing out the best version of you. In the current research, we are trying to understand what happens when these values change. When companies with strong values lose those values, are they even really the same company? When companies with bad values gain better values, how is this reflected in consumers' attitudes? Your data is helping us to answer these questions, which we hope can encourage companies to adopt more prosocial values by aligning values with companies' bottom lines.
